Introduction

This work consists of all confirmed American-series catalog listings for cylinder records produced for retail sale by the American Graphophone Company (for which the Columbia Phonograph Company was sales agent) from 1896 to the end of that company's commercial production in 1909. It does not include the celluloid Columbia Indestructible Records, which were another company's product marketed for a time under the Columbia name. They will be the subject of a forthcoming addition to the Mainspring Press Online Reference Library. A history of American Graphophone/Columbia Phonograph, including its pre-1896 cylinder production, will be found in the author's American Record Companies and Producers: An Encyclopedia History, 1888–1950 (Mainspring Press, 2018).

This is not a fully detailed cylinderography, which would need to identify the numerous remakes that Columbia produced over the years (many of which employed artists other than those listed for the original releases), change in spoken announcements and accompaniments, and other fine details. Thus, you may encounter specimens in your collection that do not correspond to the artists listed here, particularly for the brown-wax numbers that were remade in XP (black wax) format, and for XP-era numbers that were remade during the transition from piano to orchestral accompaniments. If you do, I hope you will forward that information to Mainspring Press, which we keep it on file in anticipation of eventually producing a truly comprehensive Columbia cylinderography.

It has been possible to produce a highly detailed Edison cylinderography (see Edison Two-Minute and Concert Cylinders, 1897–1912: Mainspring Press, 2015), thanks to the wealth of primary-source documentation that has been preserved by the Edison National Historic Site and the Edison Papers project. Unfortunately, the original Columbia cylinder file documentation has long since been destroyed, leaving researchers to depend primarily on now-rare catalogs and advance listings (which are occasionally inaccurate) in conjunction with aural and visual inspection of the original cylinders. A work of such scope and complexity will require the involvement of countless collectors and researchers, and is still many years in the future. However, the catalog listings given here should provide a solid foundation upon which to begin building that work.

Completion of this work has been greatly facilitated by the large archive of photocopied Columbia catalogs and ancillary materials contained in the William R. Bryant Papers, which were acquired by Mainspring Press in 2011.

Part 1: Columbia Brown-Wax Standard and Graphophone Grand Cylinders (Block System, 1896–1901 Releases)

Pre-dating the commercial introduction of molded cylinders, Columbia brown-wax cylinders of the period covered here were pantographic copies from master cylinders, which were remade from time to time due to wear-and-tear from the copying process. Consequently, volume, sound quality, and performances can vary on any given number, sometimes significantly. Artists shown here are only those who appear in the earliest known catalog listings. In remaking masters, it was sometimes necessary to substitute other artists for those in the original listing. Such changes often are not reflected in subsequent catalogs and are not shown here. Substantial additional research will be required to identify all artists on the various remade versions.

When the molded XP cylinders were introduced in 1901, many selections currently in the brown-wax catalog were remade for the new molded records and retained their original numbers, although different artists were sometimes substituted. Those substitutions are the subject of ongoing research and are not shown here.

Graphophone Grand Records — Many of these recordings same titles were also available as Graphophone Grand (5" diameter "concert" size) cylinders, under the same catalog numbers with the addition of a "G" suffix. Numbers that were listed in the 1899–1900 Concert catalogs are followed here by an asterisk. From 1900 to approximately 1903, any other numbers currently available in the standard list could be custom-ordered in Graphophone Grand format. This remains an area for further study, with the highest-numbered instance reliably reported thus far being XP cylinder 31786, a mid-1902 release.

Numerical blocks were assigned in seemingly random order. They are listed here in numerical rather than chronological order. Titles are as given in the catalogs, which in many cases is not modern standardized style.

Part 2: Columbia XP (Molded) Cylinders, 31000–33000 Series (Released 1901–1909)

Edison's launch of Gold Moulded cylinders in February 1901 forced Columbia's hand. Columbia had been developing its own molding process, but apparently was not fully prepared for the Edison launch and had to respond in haste. Whereas the Edison laboratory had painstakingly developed a hard black metallic-soap compound for molding, Columbia for a time continued to use ordinary soft brown wax for its molded cylinders. Marketed as "Columbia XP Records," the new cylinders originally retailed for 30¢ each but were later reduced to 25¢.

In August 1903, Columbia belatedly introduced its own harder black metallic-soap composition. However, the company continued to also mold certain numbers in brown wax for another year, for low-cost retailers like Sears and the O'Neill-James Company. The last confirmed molded Columbia cylinder known in brown wax is #32551 (issued c. September 1904), although by that time the vast majority of Columbia's molded cylinders were being made in the hard black metallic-soap "wax."

New recordings in the XP format were numbered beginning at 31300. However, many selections from the brown-wax catalog were remade for release as XP cylinders, retaining their original numbers, but sometimes substituting different artists. These remakes are not shown here, and remain a major area for further research.

Data shown are for the initial releases, as given in the Columbia monthly supplements and advance listings. Early recordings were often remade on later dates, as the original molds wore out and recording techniques improved. Many 1901–1904 releases, issued with piano accompaniment, were remade with orchestral accompaniment during 1904–1905, sometimes with different artists (not shown here). Titles are as given in the catalogs, which in many cases is not modern standardized style.

Production of Columbia XP cylinders was suspended on May 5, 1909, after which Columbia allowed dealers to sell off their remaining XP inventories for as little as 15¢ per cylinder. Production of BC (Twentieth Century) cylinder continued into the spring of 1909 (see next section).

Part 3: Type BC (Twentieth Century) Cylinders (6" Length, Released 1905–1909)

With a playing time of three minutes, these 6" cylinders could be used only on special Twentieth Century phonographs. Reports of the period note that the machines (which employed a mechanical friction amplifier for increased volume) were popular in theaters and dance halls. The cylinders remained in production for six months after Columbia discontinued its standard XP line.

Part 5: Busy Bee Cylinders (Non-Standard Interior Taper) (Released 1904–1908)

Busy Bee cylinders were produced by American Graphophone (Columbia) for the O'Neill-James Company, a Chicago firm founded on April 22, 1904. Mandrels on the Busy Bee phonographs were made slightly wider than standard dimensions, ensuring that purchasers could use only cylinders they bought from O'Neill-James, which Columbia manufactured with matching internal dimensions. (The outer dimension is standard, and thus Busy Bee cylinders can be played on standard machines, with a bit of careful shimming.)

Early issues were molded in brown wax, but most found today are in standard XP-type black metallic soap. Some issues, primarily those by Columbia's house groups, were anonymous. Artist credits listed here are as given in the Busy Bee catalogs, which mixed actual with anonymous artist credits in a random pattern. Where aural comparisons of the anonymous issues been made by reliable sources, the actual artists are shown in brackets.

Most Busy Bee cylinders use standard Columbia masters, employing takes that omit Columbia's name in the announcement, or that have no spoken announcement at all. However, some masters were made especially for O'Neill-James, giving the Busy Bee name in the spoken announcements. Catalog numbers of the corresponding titles on Columbia XP cylinders are shown in brackets, but be aware that in some instances they are not the identical recordings. Catalog numbers marked with an asterisk are known to use different performers than the standard XP versions of those titles, and there are likely many other such instances not yet reported.
